Early Childhood Programs

PARENT-CHILD CLASS

Potomac Crescent offers a unique Parent-Child class for the youngest children. In this class, a parent (or another caregiver) attends with the child one day each week.

In the classroom parents are busy with various tasks, many of which are centered in the domestic arts—baking, washing and ironing, sewing—as well as activities, such as woodworking and craft work. The children can help in this work or play freely. This program is designed specifically as a first school experience for the young child, who may not be ready yet to separate completely from a parent. He or she can begin to move into greater independence and a more social play experience with the support of the parent's presence and with the help of experienced teachers.

We follow a consistent rhythm in our days together: a free play/work time followed by cleanup, a gathering together with finger plays and songs leading into our morning verse of welcome, then a simple circle time with movement, songs, and verses centered around an experience of the seasons. During our snack time, we eat what the children and parents have baked or prepared in the classroom. After outdoor time on our playground, we end the day with a story or puppet play.

Through classroom participation parents can experience first-hand the Waldorf approach to early education. They can deepen their understanding of the young child, and specifically of their own child. Monthly parent meetings offer a forum for study and discussion on topics such as child development, discipline, rhythm in home life, and children's play.

This class is for children who are at least 2 years old but not older than 3 years 3 months old at the start of the session. Children need not be toilet trained in order to take part in this program. A lead teacher and assistant teacher work with a maximum of ten parent and child pairs per class. Prospective parents are welcome to observe a class by arrangement with the school.

BLUE BIRD (2-DAY) PRESCHOOL, MORNING GLORY (3-DAY) & OAK TREE (5-DAY) KINDERGARTENS

The emphasis in our early childhood classes is on developing will forces. We cultivate the young child's ability to learn through imitation, and the teacher sets an example through her or his daily classwork activities. We encourage healthy, fantasy-filled play with simple materials from the natural world. Thus, through imagination and imitation, the children try on the world and make it their own.

Every effort is made to make the early childhood classroom a warm, homelike environment for the children. Much learning takes place through imitation and example—rather than through instruction. Young children strive to become full human beings and want to engage in all healthy aspects of life. The teacher helps them to accomplish this.

In the Waldorf early childhood class the teacher plays a central role; through her or his example, the children enter the life of the class deeply. They experience the regular rhythm of each day's activities, be it household work, arts, or crafts. They are led into the yearly rhythm of the seasons with uplifting festivals, which are alive with rich colors, soulful moods, and heartfelt activities. The teacher introduces the children to song and dance, gesture and verse in the daily movements of "circle time." The children become familiar with the world of stories, both nature tales and appropriate fairy and folk tales, which are told to them in the time-honored oral tradition or are presented as simple table puppet or marionette plays. The children come to know and love the classroom world, and, through it, the wider world around them.

An important task of the early childhood teacher is to help the children grow through creative, open-ended play. Through such play, the children create the world anew each day and try on every imaginable situation within it. They build houses, pilot ships, fly rockets and drive fire engines. They explore life in homes and farms, forests and mountains, underwater caverns and outer space. They create their play worlds using the simplest of materials, such as logs and stumps, stones and shells, cloths and playstands. In the course of play, their growth in all areas is stimulated physically, emotionally, socially, mentally, and spiritually. As has been confirmed by a growing body of research, such open-ended, creative play lays a foundation for emotional and social well-being, and for lively, imaginative thinking in the adolescent and adult. It also stimulates an interest for all aspects of life, which the children may cultivate through academic studies in the elementary grades and beyond. Play is at the very heart and soul of healthy early childhood, and is the center of the Waldorf early childhood class.

Potomac Crescent offers three early childhood classes. For those children who are at least 3 years, 3 months old at the start of the school year, we have either the Blue Bird (2-day) preschool, which meets on Thursdays and Fridays, or the Morning Glory (3-day) kindergarten, which meets on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. For children who are at least 4 years 3 months old at the start of the school year, we offer the Oak Tree (5-day) Kindergarten, Monday through Friday mornings. Many children attend this class for two years. A lead teacher and an assistant work with each class. Children in any of our Kindergartens may also attend the Afternoon Program, for which there is a separate tuition schedule.

AFTERNOON PROGRAM

Potomac Crescent School offers an Afternoon Program for children enrolled in either the Blue Bird, Morning Glory or Oak Tree classes.

The Afternoon Program complements the morning classes: the same Waldorf education principles and care shape the program. The morning program flows into the afternoon program, creating a seamless transition for the child. The Afternoon Program offers a time to receive nourishment, rest, digest the morning activities, socialize, and play.

The program begins at noon, with a brief time outside, followed by lunch. Children bring their own lunches. After lunch, they prepare for rest with a ritual that is not rushed. The morning is so full for the children that the afternoon allows for them to breathe in and digest their morning. After rest in a darkened room, the children are gently awakened. Those who need to rest longer do so, and the rest enjoy coloring or making a craft. Depending on the day of the week and/or weather, they may garden, go for walks to collect “treasures” for a craft, go to the playground, or stay inside for part of the time with a planned activity.

Children may enroll at any time during the school year for 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5 days. Since space is limited, there are no “drop-ins.” Children are admitted on a first-come, first-served basis. Those who start part-way through the year will have their tuition prorated. The application for the Afternoon Program is a part of the kindergarten application. Tuition assistance is not available for this program.

EXTENDED DAY PROGRAM

The Extended Day Program is now being offered for both the Grades as well as the Early Childhood classes and is a continuation of the Afternoon Program. Extended Day runs from 3 - 5:30 p.m during which time children have a snack and engage in free-play. For those nursery school/kindergarten children who are in the Afternoon Program, the same teacher remains with them until the end of the extended day.
